Giffen goods are named after Scottish economist Sir Robert Giffen, to whom Alfred Marshall attributed this idea in his book Principles of Economics. Giffen first proposed the paradox from his observations of the purchasing habits of the Victorian era poor. The paradox is named after the 19th century British economist, Sir Robert Giffen, who found that when the price of bread fell, the demand for it also fell. According to the Law of Demand, when the price of a commodity falls the demand for it rises. Giffen's Paradox is an exception to this law. What came to be named the "Giffen Paradox" was first described by economist Robert Giffen, an economist, statistician, and journalist.
